

Walden Woods Tree of the Month

This month, we are profiling tree # b-3667 which is located on the south side of Brister's Hill. This magnificent birch is rich in history and beauty. Here are a few of the magnificent events in its history.

- ⇒ October 11, 1872. Henry David Thoreau writes in his journal, "I think there can be no greater place to relieve oneself then under the outstretched arms of this magnificent birch."
- ⇒ September 16, 1992 Bud Henley tests Thoreau's hypothesis.
- ⇒ April 14, 1993 Don Henley extinguishes a cigarette under this tree.
- ⇒ June 17, 1993 After recreating the Walk for Walden Woods, Ed Begely ponders, "If only I could drink the sap of this magnificent tree, I would never have to garden again."
- ⇒ August 5, 1994 A tired group of Prodigy friends stops to rest under the branches of this magnificent tree.

Loitering--NOT!!

Recent evidence found in secret files proves that the Eagles were, in fact, not loitering during their concerts in the '70s. Undisputed photographic proof exists that these guys tore up a stage.

Don Henley demonstrates full body drumming. Neil Pert, eat your heart out.

Don Felder and Joe Walsh don goofy hats while being stalked by Timothy B. Schmit. What dramal

Final, unarguable evidence. Joe Walsh actually bends from the waist during a show. Look at the stage presence of the other three.

Glenn Frey mounts the grand piano and waves. He's got more stage presence than Gene Simmons and Alice Cooper. Whoever said he lacks charisma was high.
